

Some

possible

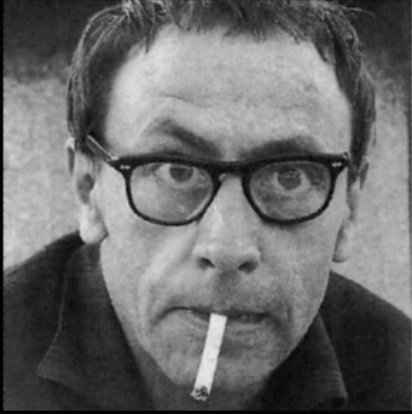

infinities

that may have been made by

dishwashers

Arthis Alan Bulfin will be taking part in some possible infinities.

It is said that in 1963 Robert Rauschenberg declared that on this day 1000 years ago art was born. When someone accidentally dropped a dry sponge into a bucket of water and realized they had created art. Therefore today is art's birthday and we must celebrate.

This is a dry sponge

This is an accident waiting to happen

Oh no, I did not see that sponge

This is how
Robert Filliou's
eternal celebration
happened 1000
years ago.

Could it have
been a dishwasher
like me...

I am shocked.
I never imagined.
I just did not think
on this day I would...

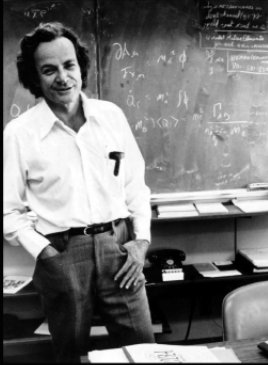

I
recreated
art's birthday
the way
Robert Filliou
meant it.

A
dishwasher's
work can be
the birth
of art.

Richard Feynman while working on the Manhattan Project kept himself entertained by breaking into his co-workers lockers. It is said that on one occasion he left a note declaring the death of belief. The note said that on this day many millenniums ago belief died, when someone accidentally kicked a hole into a bucket of water. As the water trickled out they realized that this apparatus could measure a length of time. After some experiments they established the first non-absolute, which is the definition of time. This killed belief. Therefore on this day belief died and we must commemorate the death of belief with an experiment.

This is an accident waiting to happen

The dishwasher is unaware of the accident waiting to happen

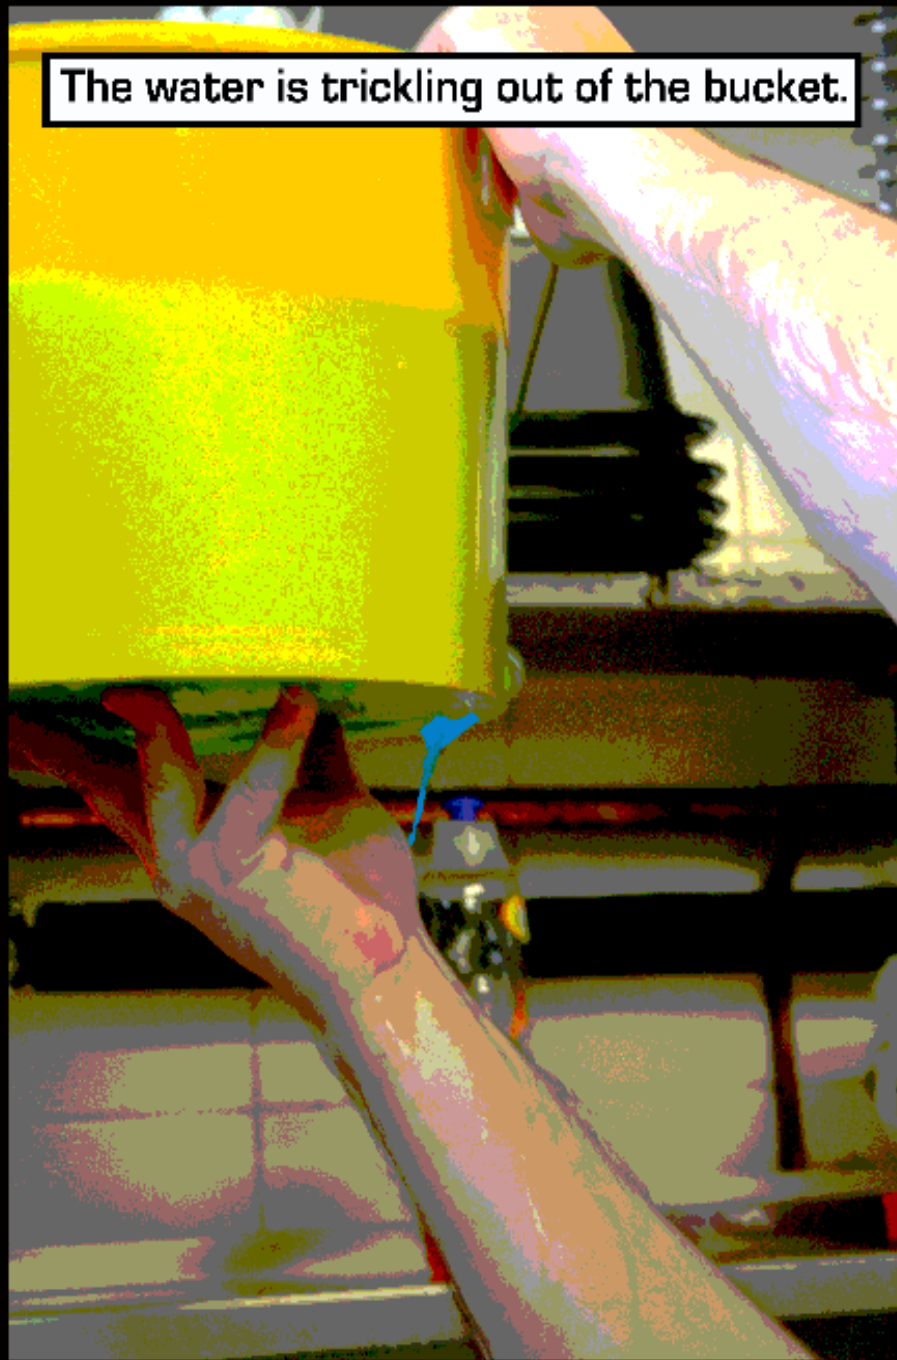

Oh no, I accidentally kicked the bucket of water!

A man wearing a blue t-shirt and a blue baseball cap is leaning over a table. He is looking down at a white bucket filled with water. A knife lies on the table next to the bucket. In the background, there is a large metal bucket filled with food. A speech bubble is positioned to the left of the man, containing the text "The bucket got knifed." The scene appears to be in a kitchen or a food service area.

The
bucket
got knifed.

The water is trickling out of the bucket.

A man in a blue uniform and cap stands in a kitchen, looking at a yellow bucket on a stainless steel counter. A speech bubble above him contains the text "Is this the death of belief?". The kitchen background includes shelves with various items, a sink, and a trash can.

Is this the death of belief?

Through experimentation
time is now understood as a non-absolute. This makes all absolutes fragile within
time.

A man with a beard and mustache, wearing a blue hairnet, a blue short-sleeved polo shirt, a blue apron, and black pants, stands in a kitchen with his hands on his hips. He is looking upwards. The kitchen background includes shelves with various items, a white tiled wall, a blue bucket, and a large tan trash can. A text box is overlaid on the right side of the image.

On this day
I recreated
the death
of belief.
I will happily
commemorate
this day with
an experiment.

It is said that Mr. T might have made more videos of life lessons but these cannot be aired on tv, because they might cause widespread revolution. This is what is reported to be on the video.

I pity the fool that does not have egalitarian passion. You should know that on this day many millenniums ago politics was enforced, when some fool accidentally made a mess of the toilet and ran away leaving the mess for someone else to clean up. This created the first form of inequality, enslavement and a conflict began for egalitarian justice. Consequently today we are within that justice or we are not; and this is your decision to make. So quit your jibber jabber and do something about it fool!

Why is that person running out the door?

The inhumanity of this is incalculable.

A man with a beard, wearing a blue polo shirt and a blue baseball cap, is leaning forward and pointing directly at the camera. He is standing in a doorway that leads to a brightly lit interior space. To his left, there is a brick wall with some notices and a stack of white plastic chairs. A speech bubble is positioned to his left, containing text.

That fool got away scot-free
and nobody
should put
up with this kind of shit.

A man wearing a blue short-sleeved shirt, a blue cap, and black pants is standing in a doorway, looking into a room. He has his hand to his chin in a thoughtful or concerned expression. The room he is looking into has pinkish-tiled walls and a tiled floor. To the left of the doorway is a brick wall with a rack of brochures and a white sign with a blue cross. A white chair is partially visible on the far left. A speech bubble is positioned above the man, containing text. The background behind him is a white door with a gold handle.

Unfortunately
I will have to deal with this somehow.

There is no problem so big that it can't be run away from.

Bless the person that deals with that

No that would be a bad idea someone has to do the right thing.

A man with a beard, wearing a blue polo shirt, a blue baseball cap, and black pants, stands in a doorway. He is looking down and to his left. In his right hand, he holds a white cloth with a yellow stripe. A blue bucket is on the floor next to him. To his right is a metal staircase railing. The doorway leads to a brightly lit area with a tiled floor. The wall to the left of the doorway is made of red brick and has a metal rack with various items hanging on it. A speech bubble is positioned to the left of the man, containing text.

Injustice like this shit
has to be dealt with
there is no choice now
that it has happened.

The deposing of egotism and keeping what is closest to you nice can change everything. My mammy said that and I think she is right.

